Incorporating Sources into your Work
Read the paragraphs below and then answer the following questions

Reactive Attachment Disorder
Author Jude Cassidy
1999
Pg. 5-6

Children with RAD will benefit most from an individualized treatment plan that will usually include work with the child’s family to help them foster an attachment to their child. Except when complicating factors arise, hospitalization is generally contraindicated since the treatment goal is fostering an attachment between the child and parent.

While some therapists have advocated the use of so-called coercive holding therapies and/or "re-birthing techniques", there is no scientific evidence to support the effectiveness of such interventions. In fact, there is a strong clinical consensus that coercive therapies are contraindicated in this disorder. And unfortunately, as recent events attest, such unproven and unconventional therapies can also have tragic consequences.
